Parosteal Osteosarcoma Arising from a Rib: Imaging Features with an Emphasis on Magnetic Resonance Imaging

WC Torreggiani, 1 DW Struk, 1 K Al-Ismail, 1 PL Munk, 1 K Evans, 2 JX O'Connell 3

1 Department of Radiology,
2 Department of Thoracic Surgery,
3 Department of Pathology, Vancouver General Hospital, University of British Columbia, Vancouver, Canada

Parosteal osteosarcomas are uncommon neoplasms that typically affect the long bones. Primary involvement of a rib is very rare. The imaging features of a parosteal osteosarcoma involving a rib are described, including the magnetic resonance imaging features, which have not been previously been reported in the literature. (J HK Coll Radiol 2001;4:284-287)

Key Words: Computed tomography, Diagnostic imaging, Magnetic resonance imaging, Osteosarcoma